

The Barjon Group hosted the Ryan Cameron Community Garden Groundbreaking and Community Volunteer Work Day on October 18, 2014. Volunteers on behalf of The Barjon Group as well as The Ryan Cameron Foundation came together to begin this garden in the Bankhead community of Atlanta. This first phase of work consisted development of garden beds and filling them with soil, as well as trash cleanup in the area. The goal of the garden was certainly met in this beginning stage, as Ryan Cameron states the end objective is to “educate people to become good stewards of the land. The Community Garden will enable people to grow fresh and healthy produce while learning good stewardship practices, such as organic growing techniques and composting to improve the soil.” This day only marked the beginning of the greatness that is to come from this garden, as volunteers came from all over and got down and dirty with the goal of growing healthier communities.
